PLANTING INSTRUCTIONS

Few plants respond so readily to good care and culture as the rose. But few will survive under more adverse conditions. Or, though your bushes may grow, do not expect best results unless you would give them thought and care throughout the year. Our plants are packed well in damp moss to arrive in perfect condition for immediate planting. If not planted immediately the roots should be kept moist and stored in cool place until planted.

Select a place that has not less than one-half the day's sun, more or full sun is better. Dig the soil to a good depth to know that the plant will have good root room and that a layer of hard pan or tight earth does not exist just below the plant to hold water and injure during the winter months. Enrich the soil with well rotted manure and sand if necessary to create a friable condition. Some clay in the soil is desirable for its mineral content, provided enough sand and humus are added to make the soil workable.

Dig large holes, spaced 18-24 inches apart. Spread out the roots and fill in with loose earth. Run water in the holes while filling in to bring soil in better and closer contact to the roots. Cut back tops to about 10 or 12 inches. Do not plant too deep. Plant only to the depth the plant originally grew. This may be readily seen by the color of the bark, or just below the branches.

During the growing season the plants should be fed with a good complete commercial fertilizer worked into the top soil around the plant; small quantities monthly is best.

Dust the plants frequently with dry sulphur, containing about one-fifth arsenate of lead, to keep down mildew. Watch the young shoots for Aphids and use a spray containing either nicotine or pyrethrum.

Space does not permit more detailed instruction and only a general outline is intended. Your interest and good judgment are after all the most important factors and will pay you a thousandfold for every effort spent.

A Choice Collection of BEARDED IRISES FOR YOUR GARDEN

There is no other flower that combines so well with the rose as the bearded iris. Clumps of irises planted among the roses add much to the garden's attraction at blooming time.

Irises require so little care, are practically free from any known pests, and give the gardener so much for so little trouble. When planted for mass effects there is no other flower that can compare to the iris.

We offer Oregon grown rhizomes of large size and vigorous health that will give you blooms the first season. All our plants are hardy, having weathered more than two feet of snow and a severe winter. In spite of this they mature early and can be shipped the latter part of June so that you can get them well established before fall.

The popularity of the newer irises has been on the increase for the last few years which makes it hard to keep all of the most desirable varieties available throughout the shipping season. Order early so you may not be disappointed.

All shipments are sent with transportation prepaid.

No orders accepted for less than $1.00.

Terms, cash with order, sent by check, draft or money order.

We guarantee all rhizomes to be first size, true to name, free from disease and pests, and to reach you in a live and healthy condition. We do not guarantee them to live or grow in your garden under conditions over which we have no control.

IRIS CULTURE

Any ordinary garden soil, and almost any position suits the Iris, but a rather dry and sunny position is the best; they object to fresh stable manure, which should be avoided when planting. If the best results are desired they should be planted in good, rich soil which must not be deficient in lime. The latter constituent is of the greatest importance in the cultivation of bearded Irises, and it must be added to the soil if not present in sufficient quantity. It is a good plan to give a dressing of superphosphate of lime when transplanting, and a dressing of powdered chalk in the autumn and winter.
